

Tommy Tales are downloadable and printable books only available on the Internet from the following Web sites:
www.learningpage.com
www.readinga-z.com

Tommy Tales feature the lovable rascal
Tommy Tomkins and his friends.

Supporting material is available on the Learning Page Web site, including teaching notes, worksheets, and fact files.

Look for the next Tommy Tales adventure—coming soon from Learning Page.

BOOK 27

Tommy Saves the Fourth of July

Tommy Tales

Tommy and his friends were playing in the park. They were very excited because it was the third of July. The next day would be Independence Day. There was going to be a big picnic in the park. After sunset, there was going to be a big fireworks show.

"I can't wait until tomorrow," said Sam.

"I love fireworks."

"Tomorrow will be the best fireworks display the town has ever had," said Andy. "The newspaper said there would be lots of special cool rockets."

Tommy was just about to speak when they heard a loud bang. The children quickly put their hands over their ears.

"Oh, hello, little girl. We're delivering fireworks for tomorrow's fireworks display," he explained. "We had an emergency phone call from our factory in China. They told us to deliver all our best fireworks to this address. You are going to have the best fireworks display you've ever seen."

The deliveryman didn't know why all the children laughed so loudly.

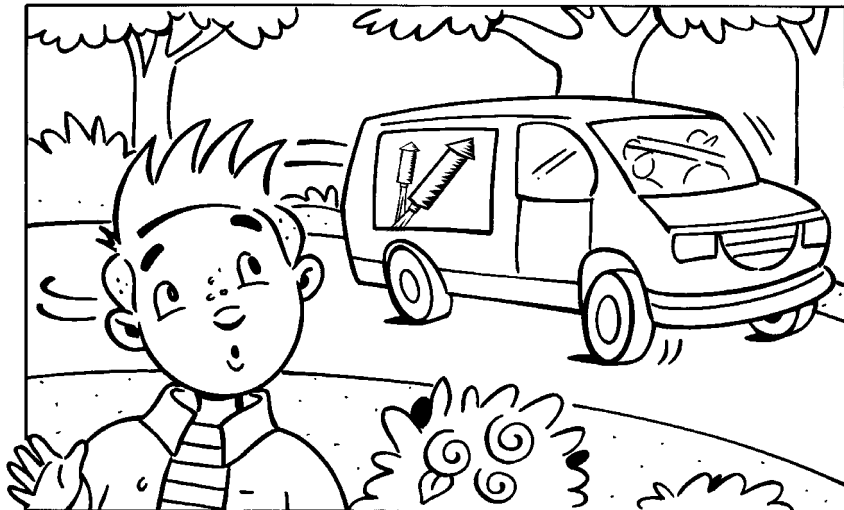

They arrived back at the park and talked about their trip. They wished they could have the fireworks they saw at the factory for the Fourth of July celebration.

Then Tommy looked up. He shouted, "Look at that van. It has the same symbol as the factory in China."

They all ran after the van. It stopped at the bottom of the park. This was where the fireworks show was to take place.

A man was opening the back doors of the van. Sam was the first to speak.

"What are you doing?" she asked.

"What was that?" asked Tommy.

Before anyone could answer, the sky filled with light. There were explosions, and colored stars filled the sky.

"What's happening?" asked Kim. "Are they starting the fireworks show too early?"

"No, it looks as if everything is happening at the same time," said Lucy. "Something has gone wrong."

"Look, it's Bobby and Billy! They must have something to do with this," said Kim.

"Hey, Bobby! What have you two done?"

Tommy called out to the two troublemakers.
Bobby and Billy looked scared.

"We just wanted to get our ball back," said Bobby. "We didn't mean to hit the switch that set off all the fireworks."

"Did anyone get hurt?" asked Kim.

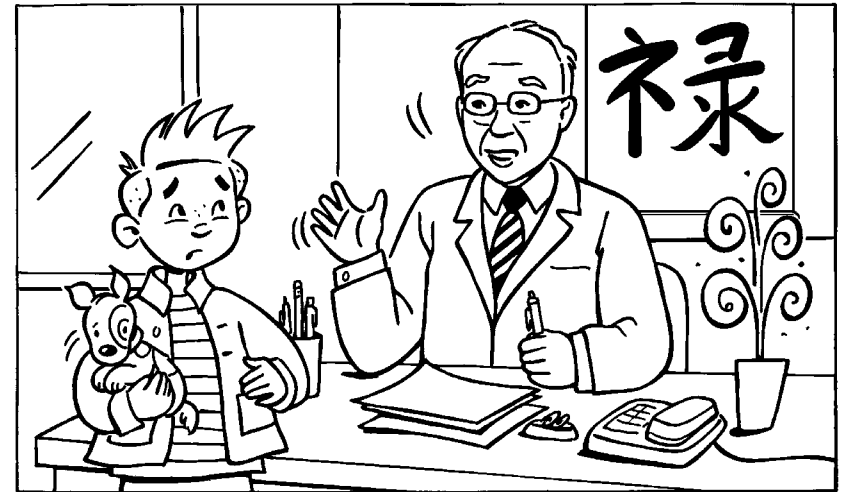

"Of course not!" said Billy.

"Now there are no fireworks for tomorrow!"
Andy said sadly.

Tommy stepped forward. He explained what had happened to the Fourth of July fireworks. He asked Mr. Yip if the factory could help.

"Well, I can't let children take fireworks home. They are too dangerous. Tell me the name of your town, and I'll see what I can do," said Mr. Yip.

The children were sad when they left the factory. They didn't think Mr. Yip would be able to send fireworks by the next day.

When the children were outside the factory gates, they let RK-5 take them back home.

"I have arranged for you to tour my factory. You will see how fireworks are made," said Mr. Yip.

The children enjoyed the tour very much. It was interesting to see how the different types of fireworks were made.

After the tour, the children were shown back to Mr. Yip's office. "I'm glad you liked seeing how fireworks are made," said Mr. Yip. "Is there anything else I can do for you?"

"We must do something," said Tommy. "We must have fireworks for the Fourth of July."

"What can we do?" asked Lucy. "No one is allowed to have fireworks unless they are putting on an organized show. Fireworks are too dangerous."

"Yes, Bobby and Billy have proved that," said Kim.

"Let's ask RK-5. He may know what to do," said Lucy.

Tommy gently pulled his little robot friend from his pocket.

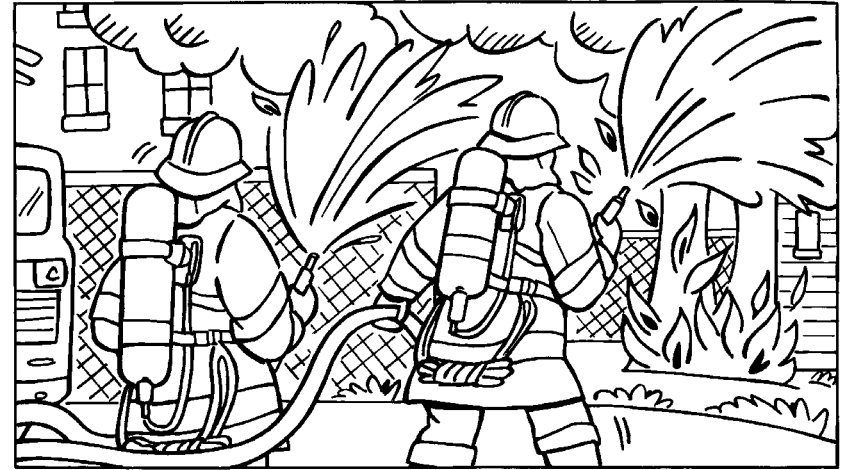

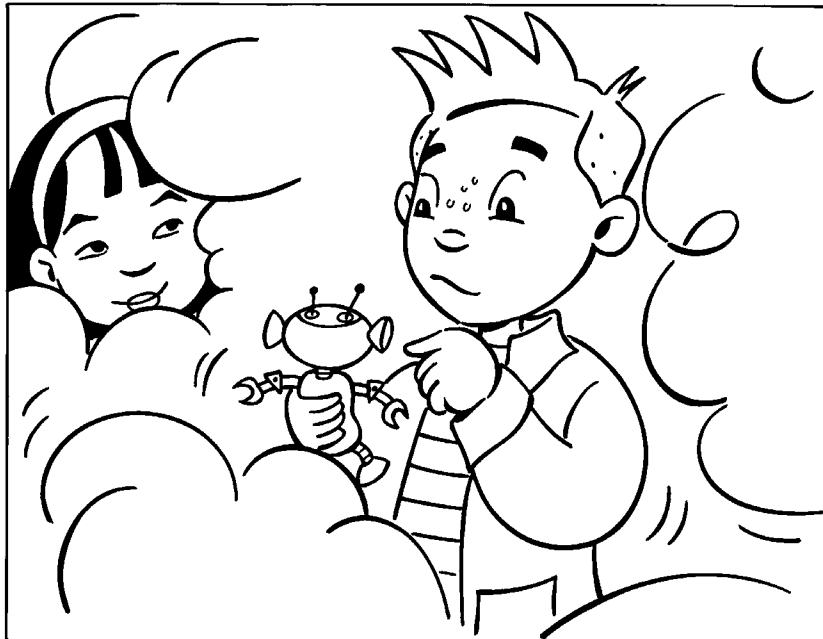

"I know about fireworks," said RK-5. "They were invented in China. The country of China still makes some of the best fireworks."

"Can you take us to a place in China where they make fireworks?" asked Sam.

"Of course I can," replied RK-5. "I can take you anywhere you want to go."

They could hear the sirens of a firetruck as Tommy punched the code into RK-5's number pad.

As soon as Tommy entered the final number, there was a flash of light and a cloud of blue smoke. When the smoke cleared, the children were nowhere to be seen.

The firefighters rolled out their hoses and began to spray the fire. They were just in time. It only took them a few minutes to put out the fire.

One of the guards walked to where the children were waiting. He motioned for them to follow him. They walked through the gate and into the factory.

The children were shown into an office. A man in a blue suit sat behind a big desk. He said that he was Mr. Yip. He explained that he was the owner of the fireworks factory. He was very grateful that they had helped save his factory from the fire.

The big dogs were dragging the guards behind them. Taffy and Tommy ran toward the fire, which had spread to more trees.

The guards soon realized what Tommy was trying to tell them. One of the guards took out his radio and called for help.

The fire was now getting dangerously close to the factory. The guards motioned for the children to stay back. The children went to the shelter in the park where they would be safe.

Within a couple of minutes, the sound of sirens filled the air. A speeding firetruck headed for the burning trees. The fire had spread to some sheds next to the factory.

When Tommy opened his eyes, he saw a big building in front of him. There was a sign on the building. He didn't know what it said because it was written in Chinese characters. He did recognize the symbol on the sign. It was two exploding rockets.

The children walked toward the main gate. Two guards blocked it. Each guard had a big, fierce-looking dog on a leash. The dogs barked at the children as they walked past the gate.

"What can we do? They won't just give us fireworks for the Fourth of July show," said Kim.

"Look, there's a little park there," said Andy.
 "Let's go there and think about it."

The children sat in the park and tried to think. It started to rain, so they found a shelter.

Nobody could think of a way to ask for fireworks from the factory.

Suddenly, they heard a loud crack of thunder. Then a bolt of lightning struck a tree near the factory. The tree burst into flames. The fire quickly spread to another tree.

"We must do something quickly," said Tommy. "If the fire reaches the factory, all the fireworks will explode."

Tommy didn't wait. He ran as fast as he could to the factory gate. Taffy was running close behind him as they reached the two guards. The guards didn't speak English so they couldn't understand what Tommy was saying.

Taffy knew what to do. He growled at the big guard dogs. Taffy teased them until they ran after him.

